reputación: The Spanish word reputación means reputation.

These are some examples of how the word or forms of the word are used:

1. Spiders may have a bad reputation for being scary, but they are important to us. Bradley hopes his work shatters some myths about spiders. (A myth is a false idea that many people believe is true.)
2. Brazil's warm climate and beautiful beaches attract people from all over the world. What else attracts people to Brazil? The country's reputation for fun! During Carnaval, seven weeks before Easter, for four straight days, Brazil turns into one big party. It is Carnaval time!
3. Bats often get a bad reputation. A reputation refers to the way people think of something. But D'Angeli says there is a lot to like about the nocturnal (active at night) animals. Bats, for example, help the environment. "Many valuable bat species eat crop-damaging insects," he says.
4. Gentle isn't a word you would expect to see in an article about sharks, especially giant ones. Sharks have fearsome reputations. But though they're carnivores (flesh eaters), sharks rarely attack people. "There are only a dozen or so species that have ever bitten a human," says Hueter, "and none of them actively hunt humans as prey."
5. HGH is a natural chemical released by the pituitary gland that circulates in the blood and stimulates growth and development, especially in kids and teens. When synthetic HGH is injected into the body, it can increase muscle mass, strengthen bones, and reduce body fat. (Side effects can include overgrown hands and feet, enlarged internal organs, and heart problems.) HGH use is banned in professional sports. Purita has admitted using HGH to treat athletic injuries but says that he did not give it to Colón. "I just won't give it to [professional athletes]," Purita told The New York Times. "I don't need the stigma and that kind of reputation."
